ABSTRACT

The directory details formal and informal agencies and organizations and the programs and projects through which they provide services to rural populations in the United States and its territories. The book gives the level at which a program is offered, its primary focus, and its target population. The book's major divisions are based on program level: federal (administered by the United States government); national (organized nationwide with a professional service motive); regional (resulting from the union of several states with a common purpose); state (meeting needs of the state's population); local (operating in multicounty, county, or local areas to serve needs of people residing in the immediate locale); and private (serving via foundation, trade, or non-public means). Each major division contains a matrix showing each agency's type, functions, and target population (by age, ethnic background, and need or disability), and whether the effort is a collaborative venture. A list of the names and addresses of the agencies at that level follows the matrix. In the state and local level section, states and territories are organized alphabetically within federal regions and programs are organized alphabetically within state or territory. A map of the federal regions is included. (Author/SB)

Delivering Service to Rural Populations: Potential Interagency Collaborators

State Service Agency Data Collection

To ascertain agencies, organizations, programs, and projects delivering services to rural populations, letters requesting such data were sent to selected state departments of general service in every state and in the territorial possessions of the United States.

Using the Commonwealth of Kentucky Directory and the State Information Book, a graduate assistant identified the state-level service providers which appeared to have potential impact upon rural programs: agriculture, commerce, community/economic development, energy, health/mental health, housing, labor/employment, library services, natural resources/conservation/environment, social services, and transportation. The master list of departments and addresses was prepared by the administrative assistant on the System Six Information Processor.

A simple form outlined the kinds of information sought: level at which administered; name of agency, organization, program, or project; kind of service/focus on concern; target populations for whom intended including aged, disabilities/needs, and ethnic groups; possible cooperation with the National Rural Project; and evidence of collaboration with other agencies. A sheet detailing the kinds of information sought was enclosed with the forms.

The cover letter explained the research orientation of the National Rural Project, requested the prompt return of the form (two weeks), and suggested that the letter and form be referred immediately to the person who could best address it.

State Education Agency Data Collection

In order to insure a comprehensive search for agencies, associations, projects, and any additional service delivery programs with rural areas as the emphasis, a search through available literature was initiated. There was a scouring of directories, National Inservice Network abstracts, journal articles, and the Management Information System data bank of the National Rural Project.

There were data to support efforts of state educational agencies providing in-service to parent groups in an effort to rally support for local educational agencies. With this kind of concrete information, the question was posed by staff as to the extent of this practice.

As the search of literature continued, there was also evidence of university-based programs focusing on rural issues that were housed in departments other than special education and funded through sources such as the U.S. Department of Agriculture. It was then decided that both SEAs and universities/colleges should be tapped for possible projects not listed in available literature.

With the aid of a graduate student, a comprehensive mailing list of universities, colleges and SEAs was compiled. Letters were then sent to 350 institutions of education in order to locate all projects and grants, whether or not they were housed in institutions within metropolitan areas.

Composition of the letter was brief but specific as to the information requested by the NRP. Because of the cost factor involved in addressing the issue before each department head, the letter requested that the receiving party forward the enclosed information request form to the appropriate individual.

Compilation of Data Regarding
State Service Agencies and State Education Agencies

Responses to the letters requesting information about state service agencies and state education agencies varied greatly from state to state. Personnel in some primarily rural states responded that no special programs or agencies existed specifically for rural populations as the focus of the entire state government was toward serving all constituents in the (rural) state. Personnel in other states replied that proximity to great urban areas left no truly rural areas, but rather, suburban areas. Replies from some states included carefully listed programs serving multitudes of rural populations in quite specific ways or marked tables identifying agencies with specific rural foci.

National Rural Project staff then listed agencies, organizations, programs, and projects identified in their reading and files of data expanded appreciably.

The original intent was to list only programs for rural populations, but the staff found that many agencies claim responsibility for serving rural dwellers as well as urban and suburban residents. Because the object of the Rural Services Directory is to make available the names and addresses of organizations that could have an impact upon services to handicapped pupils in rural areas, particularly if such groups collaborated in service delivery - the staff opted to include the names of organizations (especially national) that also serve urban populations.

The nature of the data collection made it difficult to keep all officers, programs and addresses current. The responses of general state agencies and state education agencies were received, for the most part, between September and December, 1980. The results of the general election of November, 1980, precipitated some major staff changes in Washington, D.C.

Although efforts have been made to update the directory since its inception, undetected changes may have occurred.

Explanation of the Layout of the Directory

The Rural Services Directory is a compilation of data regarding agencies and organizations of data regarding agencies and organizations (formal and informal) and the programs and projects through which they render service to rural populations.

The general divisions of the manual enable the user to determine the level at which a program is offered, its primary focus or concern, and the populations for whom it is primarily intended. Evidence of collaboration is noted by a checkmark in a final data column. The divisions incude agencies administered through the United States government - federal; agencies organized nation-wide with a professional service motive - national; agencies resulting from the union of several states with a common purpose - regional; agencies provided at the state level to meet the needs of their constituents - state; and agencies operating in multi-county, county or local areas to serve persons residing in the immediate locale- local. Organizations formed to serve via foundation, trade, or non-public means are described as private.

At the beginning of each general division, a matrix describes the agencies identified at that level, primary functions, and primary target populations. Immediately following the matrix are pages containing the names of the agencies identified, their addresses, and brief descriptions of services offered.

The order of the directory proceeds from federal, national, regional, and state to local levels. Because local programs are usually of greater interest to persons within the State, local projects so labeled are addended to the listings of state service agencies. The section describing private organizations concludes the manual.

Of special note is the arrangement of the state agencies. The programs of each state are entered alphabetically. The states are entered alphabetically within the ten Federal regions in which they are found i.e., Region I contains Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Vermont. The territories are included in Federal regions that suggest geographical or ethnic ties, i.e., Puerto Rico is included in Region II as is New York.

Care has been taken to identify the types of agencies and the functions served. If an organization addresses several needs or performs several services, all appropriate columns have been marked.

Identification of Agencies, Organizations, Programs, and Projects --
Rural in Thrust— and Factors Related to Potential Collaboration

Level The provision of agencies, organizations, programs and projects frequently occurs as a result of governmental regulation and implementation. Other services are provided by national professional and/or trade units. The divisions in this manual identify the following levels: federal, national, regional, state, local, and private.

Type of Agency Twelve commonly rendered services are identified on the matrix used to describe agencies and programs: agriculture, commerce/tourism, community/economic development, education, energy/public utilities, health/mental health, housing, labor/employment, library services, natural resources, social services, and transportation.

Function Chief concerns are described by the following terms: administration, advocacy, direct services, extension, funding, information dissemination, inservice, legal service, planning, policy, preservice, recreation, regulation, rehabilitation, research, resource linkage, and technical assistance.

Target Populations Target groups are identified by age, need/disability, and ethnic group. Numbers corresponding to the following key are used in the state and local matrices.

Age	Disabilities/Needs		Ethnic
1. 0-5 years	1. Educable Mentally Handicapped	9. Orthopedically Handicapped	1. Black
2. K-12	2. Trainable Mentally Handicapped	10. Multi-Handicapped	2. Native American
3. Adult	3. Profound/Severely Handicapped	11. Other Health/Autistic	3. Hispanic
4. University	4. Learning Disabled	12. Gifted	4. Oriental
5. All	5. Behavior Disordered/Emotionally Disturbed	13. Disadvantaged	5. Caucasian
	6. Visually Handicapped	14. Migrant	6. All
	7. Hearing Handicapped	15. All
	8. Speech Impaired

Interagency Collaboration. Any effort reported as a cooperative venture with another agency, organization, program, or project is marked in the IAC column.
